OXFORD

DONOR REPORT 2009-10

THANK YOU FROM THE PRINCIPAL

It is with great pleasure that I write the introduction to the College's first donor report. This has come out of the desire of the College to be as transparent as possible about its financial affairs and also to recognise and celebrate the extraordinary contribution of Old Members to the College today. Membership of Jesus College is for life and we are very fortunate to have such an active community of Old Members involved in the life of the College today.

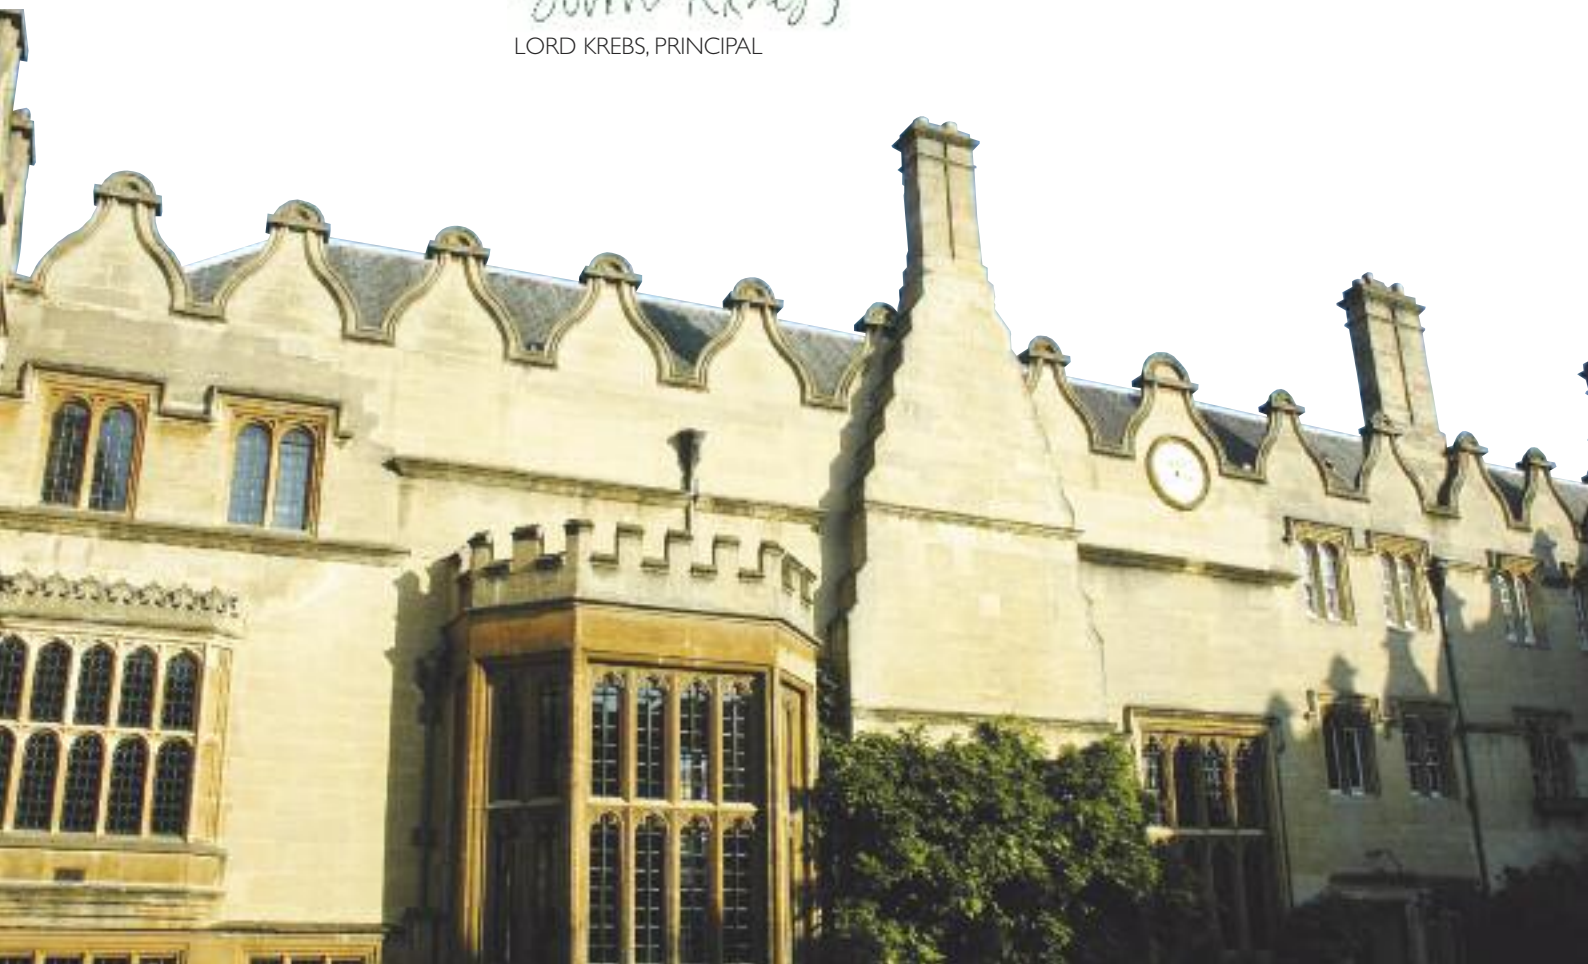

In 2009/10, I am delighted to see that over 13% of Jesus' Old Members have given back to the College. Donations have been given to support Tutorial Fellowships – particularly in Law and History, the Ship Street Centre, access bursaries, research and a multitude of other projects. This publication aims to tell some of the stories behind this support.

At a time of great financial uncertainty, the support of the College's Old Members is more important than ever:

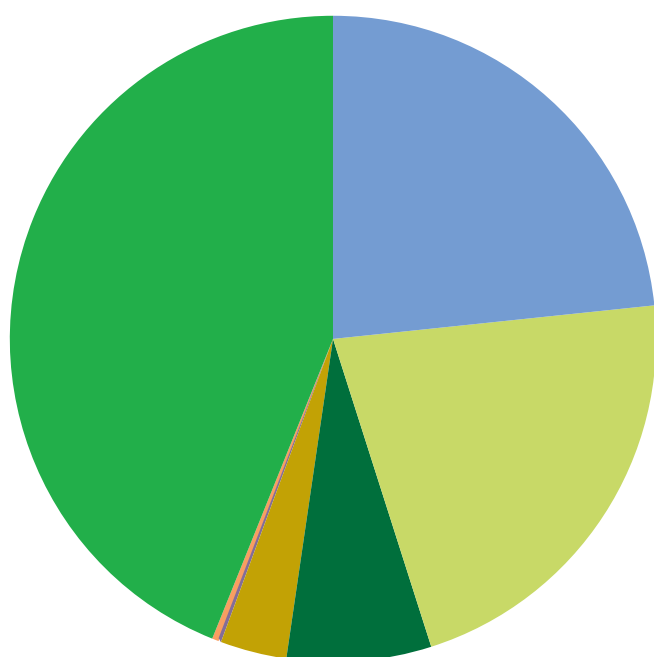

- The appeal for the Ship Street Centre continues with as much urgency as before the building opened. Repaying the funds into our endowment will enable the income to be used to subsidise undergraduate teaching.
- The appeals for History and Law Fellowships are part of the College's aim to secure tutorial teaching at the College for future generations.
- The access bursaries, received by over a quarter of the undergraduates, make a real difference to the ability of students from less advantaged backgrounds to benefit fully from the Oxford experience.

I would like to thank very warmly indeed everyone who gave their support in 2009/10. I would also like to thank all those who have volunteered their time and effort to help us – the Members of the Development Committee, members of the Ship Street Committee, champions for the History and Law appeals and the many of you who have helped to persuade your year groups and peers to give.

LORD KREBS, PRINCIPAL

COLLEGE FINANCES IN 2009/10

Jesus College Endowment

At the end of the last financial year, the value of the College's endowment was £110m. The College was able to draw income of £3.8m from these investments, which was 44% of our total income for the year. It is easy to see, therefore, why we rely on the income provided by the College's generous benefactors over the centuries.

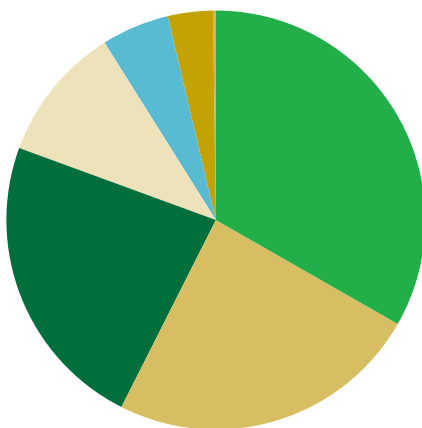

We have an investment portfolio that has four main components. Our agricultural property is worth £21m. Although income yields on agricultural land are not high, capital values have appreciated in recent years and we hope to benefit from a substantial residential development on land near Lincoln over the next 20 years or so. We also own commercial property (mainly retail) with a value of £56m. The largest component of this is the shops on Cornmarket Street that adjoin the College. Although these have provided a very good investment return in recent years, the retail property market is currently not strong, and we have one property without a long term tenant. This costs us around 10% of our endowment income each year, and has put a severe strain on the College's finances, coupled as it is with a period of relatively poor performance on the world's stock markets. This also affects the remaining major components of our endowment: public bonds. These are approximately equally divided between index funds and actively managed funds. Dividend income from these investments was down significantly in the last financial year, although there were a few bright areas. Emerging markets have performed particularly well of late, and our asset allocation reflects a continued belief in their potential.

The College's investment policy was last reviewed almost five years ago, and as part of the development of our new Five-year Strategic Plan it is being reviewed.

FUNDRAISING

The Development Office was set the task of raising £3 million in new donations and pledges in its first three years and we are delighted that at the end of the second year, we have almost reached this target.

In 2009/10, the College received new donations and pledges of just over £2 million, thanks largely to the generosity of Old Members. Donations received ranged from £5 to £600,000, given as single donations, regular gifts and pledges over several years.

Many of these donations and pledges have been given in support of the Ship Street Centre and towards the endowment of Fellowships, both of which will remain priorities for the College over the coming years. We have also seen a significant increase in donations for the Development Fund, which supports many day-to-day projects at College that contribute significantly to the experience of the current students.

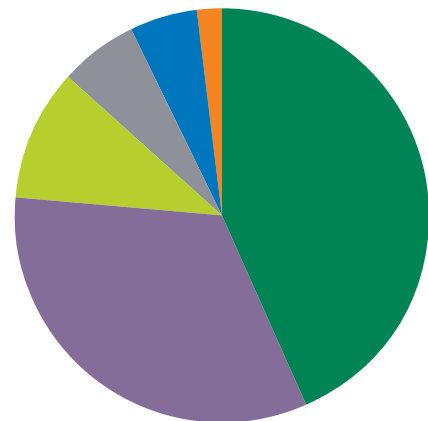

We are particularly pleased to see a rise in the proportion of Old Members giving back to College. In 2009/10, 13.4% of Old Members made gifts to College, compared with 8.5% in the previous year. But we still have some way to go to reach the participation rates experienced by other colleges such as Univ (33%), Corpus (30%), and (dare I say it) Exeter at 20%.

Importantly our return on investment was high. Every £1 the College spent on fundraising in 2009/10 generated £9.26 in new donations and pledges.

My father, TPM Lewis (1922-26), was brought up on a poor tenant sheep farm in Carmarthenshire. He was only able to afford to come up to Jesus to read History because he had won a Meyricke Exhibition. When I came up in 1966 I was surprised and delighted that I had been offered a place to read Law. I had the benefit of a good grant from my local authority in Wales and even increased it once by coming back early in the vacation to work in my last year. I was very fortunate to leave without any debt at all.

Most of us undergraduates worked reasonably hard and enjoyed ourselves on the sports field and in the bar. It is only with maturity however that I have realised quite what an enormous privilege I was given by the College and how the tutorial system changed my life and way of thinking.

The need in the current economic climate to enable students to come up on merit alone whatever their financial circumstances and to benefit from the tutorial system is paramount; our nation's future skills base depends on it. This is why graduates like me who have been very fortunate in life have a duty to help the College we love and to which we owe so much.

Sir David Lewis DL – 1966, Law

Major gifts

Within the last year the College introduced a patron scheme to better reflect the gratitude we have for our major donors. Divided into tiers, the different patron levels are named after significant donors and benefactors to the College in the past. In addition to these tiers, we have also introduced a 1571 Society, in celebration of the College's foundation, to thank individuals who donate £1,571 or more to the Development Fund, on an annual basis.

Patron Levels

Principal's Circle of Benefactors	Jenkins Patron	Meyricke Patron	Mansell Patron	1571 Society
£100,000 and above	£50,000-£99,999	£10,000-£49,999	£2,000-£9,999	£1,571 p.a. upwards

Patrons are not only recognised for their generosity in this Report, and on donor boards around College, but also invited to exclusive events, and sent a small token of our appreciation. As with all donations made to the College, we respect an individual's request to remain anonymous and/or refrain from becoming part of the patron scheme.

Legacies

In the last financial year, we received £12,284 in legacy income, significantly lower than the average legacy income across the colleges. Increasing legacy income is a priority for the College's fundraising over the next year.

In 2009/10, the Development Office produced and distributed 380 copies of the Legacy brochure. Legacy information was also sent to all Old Members with the Record.

In the last year, 26 Old Members have informed the College that they are leaving bequests in their Wills.

In 2010/11, the College will be launching a Legacy Society to acknowledge and thank all those individuals who having included the College in their wills.

For more information about legacy giving, please see www.jesus.ox.ac.uk/alumni/pledging-a-legacy

Updating our wills was a task that my wife Alma and I had been considering but 'putting off' for some time. In 2006, when she was diagnosed with terminal cancer, the task suddenly became a priority. It was then we decided to include bequests to favourite charities in our new wills.

After Alma, the education I received at Roundhay School, Jesus College and Lancaster University Management School has been the biggest contributor to my life. For a state grammar school boy, Jesus College opened a whole range of new experiences and opportunities – and created friendships maintained to this day. With hindsight I recognise just how much former benefactors contributed to making this possible. Through the legacy in my will, I want to contribute, albeit in a small way, to sustaining the College for future generations and to providing an Oxford education to students for whom, without benefactors, it might not be available.

Alma's chosen charities have already benefitted from her bequests. Hopefully it will be many years before Jesus College benefits from mine!

George Reah – 1962, Mathematics

Regular giving

Old Members have a history of regularly giving money to the College, especially as part of a group. The longest established of these is the Years to 1969 Group, who have been supporting exhibitions, access bursaries and postgraduate scholarships for twenty years. Other groups have sprung up over the years and together they contribute to essential projects throughout the year.

In recent years, with the formation of a fully functioning Development Office, a structured programme of annual fundraising, called the Development Fund has been introduced. In its second year, gross new funds have been in excess of £191,000. Projects supported by the Development Fund in the last 12 months have included:

- access bursaries to all undergraduates from low income backgrounds
- research grants for 38 graduate students
- refurbishment of the MCR
- prizes for outstanding results in first public exams
- creation of one fully-funded graduate studentship in the humanities

It was after our last Gaudy that a number of us decided to keep in contact as a loose network. The Class of 1970 Group email makes this easy to do, and we have also met occasionally.

It has been good to keep in touch and to rekindle and maintain old friendships. The unifying factor between us of course is our shared love of Jesus College, and the very high value we place on our time together there.

That naturally leads us to wish to make some contribution to ensuring that today's and tomorrow's members of the College in turn have the chance of a similarly rich experience to the one we enjoyed. We are all too aware that today's junior members do not have the advantage of the automatic grants that were in place for us.

Some of our number have contributed financially to the College in various ways for some years. But we realised that it does not take a large monthly contribution from each of us to mount up to a significant sum, if enough of us join in.

David Jenkins – 1970, English

I applied to be a part of Jesus' telethon fundraising team because it's not often that the opportunity comes along to get such a feel for the recent history of the College, and to find out so much about what the future can hold for Jesus College students. The sheer breadth of career paths taken by former Jesubites, from vicars in rural mid-Wales to partners at investment banking firms to a children's Poet Laureate, was inspiring to behold, and reassured me that there are so many career opportunities out there that I'd never even considered.

Hearing stories of how the College and the University as a whole operated decades before my time here was fascinating, as was, particularly, talking to some of the very first year of female undergraduates admitted to Oxford, and hearing their stories. In some respects the College has naturally changed so much over the decades, but it was always pleasing to hear that students from the 1950s and 60s enjoyed their time at Jesus as much as I am now, years later.

Telephone Campaign

For the second year running, the College ran a telephone campaign at the end of Trinity Term. The two-week-long operation was labour-intensive but a lot of fun. From the Upper SCR, transformed into a state-of-the-art call centre, a team of 12 current undergraduates rang approximately a third of our alumni. Although the primary reason for calling was to ask for people's contribution to the College's Development Fund, it was also a chance for current students and alumni to talk about their time at College, update information, and exchange ideas and news. This year's telethon raised over £160,000 for the Development Fund, and we would like to take this opportunity to thank once again, all those alumni who participated, and the regular contributions they are now making to the College.

Campaign Results

- 1592 Old Members were sent a letter to tell them about the telethon.
- 92% of alumni were happy to receive a telephone call.
- 635 Old Members (40%) were spoken to.
- 48.3% (307 Old Members) pledged a donation. This includes those who opted out of a call but made a donation.
- Five-figure gifts were received.
- The telephone campaign raised £160,206 for the Development Fund.

As a current student, JCR President, and a caller on the recent telethon, I have had a unique vantage point to see the impact of alumni support on students, the College, and old members. It provides so many opportunities for students, including even the basic ability to actually come to university. I have also found that keeping in touch with alumni is hugely rewarding and valuable, both to current students and to those who have left. It is wonderful to know that Jesus will still hold a place in our hearts long after we leave.

Appeals and funds

Over the past year, the College has been raising money for specific appeals: The Ship Street Centre Appeal, and the John Walsh Fellowship in History. These have been running alongside the launch of the Peter Clarke Fellowship in Law, and existing funds such as the Old Members JRF Fund, Access Bursaries and individually funded scholarships, grants and studentships.

Update of the Fellows' Library Appeal

The first Appeal for nearly 20 years was the urgent funding of the Fellows' Library, which was launched in the autumn of 2007. Three years on, and many of you who contributed to this Appeal will have had a chance to see the fruits of your generosity, by visiting the College for an event. We thought it would be interesting to reflect on the impact a successful Appeal has on the College, and to share some facts and figures about how the Fellows' Library has been integrated back into the life of the College.

The Fellows' Library is currently being used between 9-11% of the working week. Since its renovation, it has hosted more than 100 visits, from Old Members attending Gaudies and other events, academics, and families of members of the College. It has also hosted a reception for the Vice Chancellor of the University. Some Fellows of the College have primary research material in this Library, whilst others find it an ideal place to write research papers.

Oliver Bentley has just come up to Jesus College to read Physics, and is amongst the first intake of students to live in the new Ship Street Centre.

My first impressions were of a very modern building with lots of space. The design of the rooms is fantastic, especially the bastion rooms, and they all have larger beds, wireless internet, many plug sockets, and warm, en-suite bathrooms.

Ship Street offers a very high standard of student accommodation, and it is great that it is so close to the College.

The Ship Street Centre Appeal

The new Ship Street Centre has not only given us much-needed space for students and tutors, but is also serving as a conference centre during vacations, bringing in valuable income to support our students. The total project has cost £7.3 million.

An Appeal was launched over 18 months ago, to raise money to repay the amount borrowed from the College's endowment to fund the creation of this project, which needs to be repaid as soon as possible, because our endowment income provides about half the cost of an undergraduate education at Jesus.

When the Centre opened in September 2010, we had raised £1.3 million of the initial £2.8 million target, and the Appeal is still going strong, thanks to the efforts of our committee of Old Members: Robert Kay, Tim Ferdinand, Bob Yates and Bryan Bowers, and all those alumni who have so far given or pledged to the Appeal.

I arrived in Oxford by train in October 1975 and vividly remember dragging an enormous suitcase through the streets, with little idea of what awaited me. Without any known family or school connections with Oxford – Battersea Grammar School, as it then was, had a history of sending students to Jesus College Cambridge, not Oxford – I had meticulously compiled a ranking of colleges, allocating points for resident tutors in both French and German, mixed sexes and for offering accommodation in College for at least two years. Jesus College came out on top. It turned out to be the perfect choice for me.

My Oxford degree proved a springboard to success in working life, which I could never have imagined at the time, and I have wanted to put something back into the College to make sure future generations can continue to benefit in the way I have, and help preserve the College's rich heritage. There were modest contributions to the Herbert Close flats and the restoration of the Fellows' Library, but the Ship Street project is a transformative development which I had to support. My own story shows how important College accommodation is to attract and create a supportive environment for young people, who may well find the whole Oxford idea overwhelming. I understand equally the vital importance of the College having competitive conference facilities: with the imminent demise of government funding for university tuition, the College must increase its private income in order to be able to do for future generations exactly what it did for me: to give them the best possible start in their adult life.

Tom Brown – 1975, Modern Languages

Reading the Jesus Historian Blog – ‘a place for Jesus Historians past and present to share their experiences’ – before coming back to College to begin my third year, I was struck by how little has changed over the past few decades in the experience of studying History here at Jesus.

Old members invariably say that they’re grateful for the tutorial system, because it taught them how to construct arguments and think critically. It’s a sentiment I certainly share. I still remember the first time that I realised that I had met – either at a J. R. Green meeting, or a tute or class – almost all of the historians on my week’s reading list. It happened in my first term in a tutorial with Dr Heal about Elizabeth I; I’ve had that realisation many times since then, but it does not make me feel any less privileged to be able to study History at Jesus.

The J. R. Green Society remains very much alive and kicking, and the meetings are still often the highlights of the term.

Andy Kramer – Third Year UG,
Undergraduate, History

The John Walsh Fellowship in History

At a time of real funding crisis in Humanities at Oxford, the College launched an Appeal for History at Jesus College. The aim of this Appeal is two-fold: to secure one of the College’s History Fellowships which is at risk due to funding cuts, and to recognise the enormous contribution of Dr John Walsh to History at the College by naming the Fellowship after him, thereby providing a permanent legacy to help generations of Historians to come. The target of £350,000 was an ambitious one for the College, especially in the current economic climate.

To date, we have raised £200,000 towards the Appeal. We heard in September that the University has agreed to a five-year titular post in Early Modern History. This means that the College has been given the go-ahead to recruit a Tutorial Fellow at its own cost, but that after a five-year interim period the University will assume its share (approximately 30%) of the salary costs. The recruitment process has begun.

Achieving our target, however, remains a vital objective and the Appeal will remain a priority for 2010-11. We would like to take this opportunity to thank all those who have contributed their time, money and energy to this Appeal over the past year. For more information please go here: <http://www.jesus.ox.ac.uk/alumni/the-john-walsh-fellowship>

As a third year Law student I truly believe that the tutorial system at Oxford is, quite simply, invaluable. My love of the academic study of Law and indeed my ambition to pursue it as a career, is grounded in the intricacies and constantly changing nature of the subject. As a student I have found this exciting and challenging, but quite often, intimidating. The opportunity to sit down with the world's leading experts and discuss my own ideas and theories, along with the chance this gives me to address any issues I may have had with the subject material is one for which I am extremely grateful.

The unique nature of the tutorial system ensures that every student feels that they have an opportunity to develop their own theories and ideas within a genuinely supportive environment. The high number of student/tutor contact hours also gives rise to a close pastoral relationship, where students know that their general welfare and well-being is just as important a priority as their high academic achievement.

Studying Law at Jesus College has been an absolute pleasure and I feel confident in saying that I believe I will leave Oxford well equipped to continue my career in this field with (hopefully!) a great deal of enjoyment and success.

Caitlin Weeks – Third Year UG, Law

The Peter Clarke Fellowship in Law

On Peter Clarke's retirement last year, we raised the question of whether we might set up an appeal to name one of the College's two Law Fellowships after Peter. The response from many of his former pupils was very positive and an appeal has been launched.

As with History, the aim is two-fold: firstly, the College wishes to recognise Peter for his enormous contribution to Law at Jesus College. In teaching over 350 of the College's 455 living Law alumni, he has had an impact on many people's lives and provided the foundation of many successful careers.

Secondly, the College is committed to doing everything it can to secure tutorial posts. The current discussions in the wake of the Browne Report and the Comprehensive Spending Review make it clear that, for Oxford to maintain the tutorial system for future generations, it will be up to the colleges and the faculties to cover the costs. It could, therefore, not be more timely that we seek to endow in part one of the College's Tutorial Fellowship's in Law.

Our target for this Appeal is £500,000 and we have already raised £175,000. Further information about the Appeal can also be found at www.jesus.ox.ac.uk/alumni/Peter-Clarke-Fellowship

Junior Research Fellowships

In 2009/10, three of the College's Junior Research Fellows were supported by grants and donations.

- Dr Stephen Larcombe holds The Tour de Valat Junior Research Fellowship
- Dr Zheng Jiang holds the John Houghton Research Fellowship in Sustainable Energy
- James Goudkamp holds the Shaw Foundation Junior Research Fellowship in Law.

In 2009/10, the College was also able to create the Old Members Junior Research Fellow with the support given by Old Members over many years for this purpose. The post has been taken up by Dr Bennett Foddy, a philosopher working in the area of bioethics.

I have been the Shaw Foundation Junior Research Fellow in Law at Jesus College since October 2009. Holding this Fellowship frees me from the very heavy teaching obligations which most junior academics are usually required to discharge. I am in the enviable position would having most of my time free to research and write. The College gives me complete liberty to choose my research topics. It also provides me with considerable support. For example, I enjoy the opportunity to regularly discuss my research with the other law fellows at Jesus and they have generously read and comment on my draft publications. I also have access to the College's research fund, which I have used to acquire books that are essential to my work.

I am hopeful that holding a Junior Research Fellowship at Jesus College will enable me to develop a research portfolio of sufficient strength to allow me to secure a longer term or permanent research position in a university. I have worked at several universities in the past seven years. I derive great satisfaction from my work and believe that legal academics, as well as contributing to society by teaching, can make a real difference to the world by suggesting sensible ways in which the law might be reformed.

James Goudkamp – The Shaw Foundation JRF in Law

Scholarships

Scholarships endowed by individuals are a hugely generous way of giving something back to the College, and The Alun Hughes Graduate Scholarship financed by HGA Hughes, who came up in 1939, is one example. It is a scholarship for postgraduate study and research into the languages and/or cultures of Polynesia or Micronesia and the first recipient of this scholarship is about to finish his doctoral studies. Peter Rudiak-Gould writes below about the impact the scholarship has made on his studies.

However it does not just have to be the enormous generosity of one individual that can make a difference to the lives of students. The Years to 1969 Group, comprising over 200 alumni who came up before 1969, contribute small, regular amounts on an annual or monthly basis, and support amongst other things, two postgraduate studentships jointly with the Clarendon Fund. Scott Culligan, a Canadian postgraduate in his second year, writes about the enormous impact the funding has on his research and life in College.

As a student applying to Oxford from overseas with little knowledge of how a collegiate system operates, choosing a college can be a daunting task. Having received offers for a place at other colleges, it was the generous Clarendon/Old Members' Award that attracted me to Jesus.

Feeling so integrated into life at Jesus, I now find it difficult to imagine myself at any other college. I have come to discover that it is one of the most generous, supportive college's in Oxford, with incredibly helpful and approachable fellows, staff, and students.

The relationship I have fostered with Jesus is a strong one, which has motivated me to become actively involved in College life. I have rowed for the College, helped guide the redecoration of the Middle Common Room and been involved in the MCR Committee as both a Welfare Officer and Treasurer. I am extremely grateful for all of the support I have received and look forward to strengthening the strong connection I have formed with Jesus College in years to come.

Scott Culligan – DPhil, Chemistry

Support for research in the Pacific Islands is not easy to come by, and I was both surprised and grateful to find that a benefactor had set aside funding for exactly what I wanted to study. The Alun Hughes Scholarship has been an opportunity not only to pursue a DPhil but also to join the community at Jesus College. Even when I moved out of on-site housing into private accommodation, I was sure to find a house close to the College (a seven-minute walk away, as it happens), because I knew I would be walking to Jesus at least once a day! In fact, even as I live out I find that my life revolves around the College. The conversations I have with other graduates over lunch and dinner in Hall are the social (and even the intellectual) heart of my day. Dining at High Table is one of the week's highlights. I've also been able to present my research to multidisciplinary audiences through the MCR and SCR research symposia.

One aspect of the Scholarship that I am particularly grateful for is the generous research allowance, which has helped me both gather and present my material. Without it, I doubt I could have presented at the 2008 Association of Social Anthropologists conference in Auckland, or the 2009 American Anthropological Association conference in Philadelphia. It made my 2009 fieldwork in the Marshall Islands financially feasible. It continued to provide opportunities even while I was 10,000 miles away in the Marshall Islands. I had heard that an ancient and culturally important graveyard on an outer island had begun to rapidly erode due to sea level rise, and wanted to learn about how locals conceived of this tragedy. The research allowance provided the airfare, and this case study ended up being a vital part of my thesis on local conceptions of global warming.

Now that I'm planning a career in academia and applying for academic positions for next year, I sometimes wonder if any of this would have happened without the Alun Hughes Graduate Scholarship. It would not be hyperbole to say that the Scholarship changed my life.

Peter Rudiak Gould – DPhil, Anthropology

ALUMNI RELATIONS

The Development Office not only manages the fundraising programme for the College, but also is in contact with every alumni, through weekly email bulletins, termly publications and events, whether those are Gaudies and reunions, London drinks, or exclusive patron events and appeal launches.

There are over 5,300 Old Members based in 87 different countries! 842 Old Members came to at least one of the 32 events held in 2009/10.
